The operations in United States money present no difficulty to pupils who have a knowledge of decimal fractions. When United States money is taught before decimals, the pupil? should be made familiar with the first three decimal orders--tenths, hundredths, and thousandths. This can be done in one or two lessons by the method sketched on page 69. When pupils can read any decimal composed of one, two, or three orders, and have learned that cents are hundredths of a dollar, and mills thmisanths, they will readily understand why cents occupy the first two decimal orders and mills the third. The separatrix between dollars and cents corresponds with the decimal point. The reduction of United States money may be taught as an application of the reduction of decimals, or as the reduction of denominate numbers. The exorcises should be multiplied until the reduction of dollars to cents, dollars to mills, W. M. 7. cents to mills, mills to cents, cents to dollars, etc., can be made instantly. Many classes have failed when subjected to an examination on these reductions. Another process deserving special attention, is the division of one sum of money by another (Lesson IV). The first step is to reduce both dividend and divisor to the same denomination. Show that dollars can not be divided by cents, or cents by mills;...
